MESSAGE

It is with great pride and enthusiasm that I extend a warm welcome to all participants, delegates, and cinephiles to the 18th Mumbai International Film Festival (MIFF). The festival, established in 1990, stands as the oldest and largest film festival in South Asia dedicated to documentary, short fiction, and animation films.

The significance of MIFF for the Indian film industry cannot be overstated. It is a catalyst for young filmmakers and artists by providing them a nurturing environment for creative exploration, connecting them with resources, producers and funding agencies, and stimulating and empowering the documentary, short film, and animation sectors in India. Over the years, MIFF has evolved into a melting pot of creativity, showcasing the finest Indian and international cinematic works and fostering dialogue and innovation within the filmmaking community.

The 18th edition of MIFF is marked by several noteworthy firsts. The festival's first-ever 'Documentary Film Bazaar' is a groundbreaking addition, offering a vibrant hub for established filmmakers and fresh talent to collaborate and push the boundaries of documentary storytelling. This year, MIFF also extends its reach beyond Mumbai, ensuring accessibility and engagement for diverse audiences. Cultural performances from Sri Lanka and Argentina, and insights into the journey of the Indian animation industry add to the festival's rich tapestry.

2023 was a great year for Indian documentaries with awards and recognition achieved by Indian documentaries at the 95th Academy Awards, as well as at Cannes. This year, we celebrate the global laurels achieved by Indian documentaries, which have further cemented India's reputation as a hub of cinematic excellence.

As we embark on this journey together, I encourage everyone to engage with the films, participate in the discussions, and immerse themselves in the vibrant atmosphere of MIFF 2024.

Let us celebrate the power of cinema to unite, inspire, and bring about meaningful change.

Aravan Kooth - Performance of Life

India | English | Anthropology

Synopsis

The ethnographic documentary explores the rich narrative and ritual world of the Aravan festival in Koovagam, Tamil Nadu. Lasting 18 days annually, the festival draws thousands of transgender women from across India. The festival is dedicated to the deity Koothandavar, believed to embody Aravan, a Mahabharata warrior. According to legend, Aravan had to sacrifice himself for the Pandavas' victory. He agreed but had three demands: to fight and die heroically, to witness the entire war after his death, and to marry before his sacrifice. Since no one wanted to marry a doomed man, Krishna, disguised as Mohini, wed Aravan.

The festival reenacts Aravan's three wishes. The third wish invites transgender women to the festival as they relate themselves with Krishna's transformation into a woman, and consider themselves as Aravan's brides. The myths and rituals of the festival are crucial in enabling the transgender participation, who join the festival from its 13th day, participating in "marriage" and "widowhood" rites and engaging in sexual union with men, if consent is formed. The documentary delves into the festival's performative and cultural dimensions, depicting how it mirrors life's complexities and interprets life itself, highlighting the role of transgender women in this unique tradition.

Director(s) Statement

Aravan Kooth - Performance of Life delves deep into the intricate and, to some extent, bizarre inner layers of the annual Koovagam festival, popularized as the Koovagam transgender festival. The documentary explores how the festival intertwines ideas of fertility, sexuality, life, and death, along with the historical and mythical life of the village, highlighting how transgender women fit into this framework. Using ethnographic methods, the crew spends significant time in the village and in Villupuram, a district in Tamil Nadu, where associated festivities take place. This approach allows us to capture its essence while engaging with various stakeholders.

Bhaichung - The Story of India's Football Legend

India | Aboriginal, English, Hindi, Nepali | Anthropology, Others

Synopsis

Bhaichung Bhutia is an Indian football legend who played as a striker for the national team and several clubs in India and abroad. He captained the Indian National Football Team and was also the highest scorer for India in international competitions making him the torchbearer of Indian football in the international arena.

Ironically, he comes from the least populous state of Sikkim, a small Himalayan state in northeast India that has faced discrimination, racism, and marginalization from the mainstream Indian society. Growing up in a remote village in Sikkim, Bhaichung grew up in a distinct culture that was far removed from mainland India. This influenced Bhaichung's identity and career.

The documentary explores the discrimination that sportspersons from the North East India face in the rest of the country and how Bhaichung overcame these challenges to reach the pinnacle of Indian football.

Through the career of Bhaichung, the documentary will look to examine and highlight the challenges that the sport faces in terms of governance, infrastructure, and investment. It will look to understand and find answers to the chaotic state of Indian football today and why India, despite being the most populous country in the world, lags behind in the sport.

Director(s) Statement

As a filmmaker from Sikkim, I deeply understand the region's cultural and social landscape. Fascinated by sports' transformative power, I have observed the struggles and discrimination faced by players from North East India. This inspired me to document the story of Bhaichung Bhutia as he is a true embodiment of an underdog who fought through incredible prejudices of his times and through sheer resilience and determination, reached the pinnacle of Indian Football. His story also aligns with my commitment to create narratives from the perspective of the underrepresented communities that I, too, am a part of. In this context I do believe that Bhaichung's story has the power to resonate to a large audience to bring about a positive change in the world of Indian Football and beyond.

His next film, Upar Neeche, is in post-production. Recently, he starred in the Amazon Prime series The Last Hour (2022) and Netflix's Jaane Jaan (2023).

Producer(s) Statement

India, with over 200 countries playing football, ranks 120th globally, despite being the most populous country. While cricket dominates, the North East has been a football hub but faces challenges like lack of opportunities, infrastructure, and discrimination. In 1993, 17-year-old Bhaichung Bhutia from Sikkim joined East Bengal, drawing national attention and debuting for the national team at 19. He became the captain, the poster boy of Indian football and arguably the only recognisable face in Indian football. Bhaichung was touted to open up the possibilities for Indian footballers to play at the world level. But it didn't happen. Why?

Bhalu Aa Gaye!

The Bears Are Here!

India | Chhattisgarhi, English, Hindi | Anthropology, Environment & Sustainability, Others, Wildlife

Synopsis

Around 100 km from Raipur, Chhattisgarh is the Chandi Mata Temple, carved into a rock formation within its lush forests. Every evening, this innocuous holy site transforms into a venue for a fascinating man-animal interaction, drawing eager crowds to witness this marvel. A family of sloth bears wander into the temple complex, engaging with the temple priest and the gathered crowds, adapting to the unique dynamics formed by a proximity to human life.

For the temple priest, these bears symbolise cursed devotees of the temple goddess. He welcomes their presence like it is his duty. While the priest's beliefs can be seen as farcical, it is hard to ignore the beauty of the bond. Ranger Mahesh, on the other hand, is more pragmatic. He has observed these animals for years, and his role requires him to ensure the interaction is responsible. Yet he cannot be too interventionist due to the sensitivity of religious sentiments.

Our story, however, is told from the point of view of 'O', a charming, young wildlife photographer, with a passion for man-animal coexistence and forests. But being a Muslim man by name, O must protect his religious identity to gain access to capture the bears interacting with the visitors and the environment. His innocent quest to learn more about this situation creates another layer of cultural and societal complexity, set against a growing intolerance.

Director(s) Statement

The interplay of roles - as with religion and tradition in the priest, authority in the wildlife officer, and artistic expression and storytelling via a photographer who happens to be Muslim - are compelling. These exchanges present an opportunity for debate, in a manner that is brought together by forces of nature, moulded by growing development and guided by tradition.

Using humour, and observation, the director hopes to make a film that is not just impactful, but also entertaining while presenting everyday realities of identity in an ever evolving India.

Perhaps Bhalu Aa Gaye! is a warning sign, more than an exclamation!

Exploring the intersections of culture and identity, Saraiya's work moves across music, gender, mental health, politics, caste and class, technology and food. He is the director of Kya Bolta Bantai, which charts the rise of gully rap in India and a feature length exploration of India's gun culture, part of a pan-Asia series for VICE World News, titled Point Blank.

Most recently, Naman directed My Daughter Joined a Cult for Discovery+/Max, an award-winning 3 part docu-series investigating the crimes of Swami Nithyananda.

Producer(s) Statement

From a production perspective, the opportunity to create a meaningful, fun and unique story with an indie setup but with widespread reach, is massive.

As Indian films, especially the more experimental and conscious kind, find larger audiences and acceptance globally across festivals and theatrical runs, there is a slow but sure appetite within India to embrace the craft, harking back to the cinema of the 80s that shed a light on society.

Having said that, Bhalu Aa Gaye! is an opportunity to create something unique.

Himalaya Ki Peeth Par

Our Home Is In The Hills

India | Garhwali, Hindi, Kumaoni | Anthropology, Environment & Sustainability, Gender and Sexuality, Urbanization, Wildlife

Synopsis

The Askot-Arakot Yatra, a journey started with the aim of understanding the land and its people in the northern Indian Himalayas. In 1974, four young student activists set out to map the hill regions of the then state of Uttar Pradesh with the aim of understanding the socio-economic and environmental conditions and mapping the ethno-cultural diversity of the region. Since then, the trek has been organized once every decade and, in the process, has mapped the changes in the region over the past five decades.

Leading the yatra is Shekhar Pathak, a 74-year-old historian and the only remaining member of the original group of four that started it. Pathak now leads a younger group of academics and activists on this 45-day journey, covering approximately 1150 km on foot.

We intend to document the Askot-Arakot yatra this year and use the journey as a springboard to document the fast-changing environmental, cultural, and socio-economic landscape of this vital Himalayan region that is the origin of not just some of the largest rivers sustaining the vast North Indian plains and its populations but also glaciers that keep these rivers well-fed throughout the year. With environmental preservation clashing with the pressure of relentless and often ill-advised and haphazard development, the region is a hotbed of the many challenges humanity will be faced within the coming decades.

The Himalayan region of Uttarakhand has long been a land of significant importance. It is a site of deep spiritual and ecological value to, not just India, but the rest of the world.

The documentary will inter-cut from the excitement and daily challenges of a tiring 45 day trek across some of the most scenic as well as terrifying Himalayan landscapes to the deep personal stories of villagers, moving emotionally as well as in time, and will be held together by Shekhar Pathak's insightful and compassionate narration on the history, ecology, and society of these hills as seen by him and his colleagues over the last six decades.

The Askot-Arakot Yatra is an inspiring journey and civic movement that can set an example for communities worldwide. This journey refocuses our attention on the land we take from without giving back. Through this documentary, we aim to reveal the reality from the perspective of the local people and highlight the challenges they face in this ecologically unstable region, home to vital rivers and natural resources but also prone to disasters. We aim to raise awareness about the Himalayan region's challenges, find solutions, and impart knowledge, emphasizing community-led efforts and encouraging a shift in perspectives to understand changes in these remote communities over the decades.

Director(s) Statement

Violence against women in India has been in the headlines for years. Our film shows women as warriors, not victims. It tells an emotional story, through an anthology of female protagonists covering different aspects of the film's theme. The shocking facts about violence against women are part of the film and are shown in an associative way as it is important to feel that these women and girls train Kalari not just for fun but for survival.

We capture the everyday life of our protagonists in direct cinema style. The audience should be completely immersed in the action and to experience both the courage and the vulnerability of the protagonists first hand.

Our collaboration is characterized by Satindar's visual acuity and radicalism in film form and Maria's mission to create inspiring female characters. When we work together, it feels like an extended version of our individual artistic selves.

His human family faces financial trouble and can't afford fish for Imoinu Day. Tombi gets caught in the midst of rival street cat factions, forgets the way home, and becomes a street cat. Legend of Abbakka

India | English, Kannada | Anthropology, Arts, Music and Culture, Women's Movement

Synopsis

Rani Abbakka of Ullal is an inspiring warrior-queen who fought and more significantly 'won against all odds' defying the might of the Portuguese Empire during the 16th century. Unfortunately her story remains untold in history books.

Abbakka, a Jain, ruled over a diverse population of Muslims, Hindus and Christians, united by the common interest of keeping the foreign invaders at bay. This was a time of gunpowder versus the sword; cannons boomed through defiant fire-arrows. Abbakka was even betrayed by her husband but she challenged tradition and 'divorced' him. Unlike many early freedom fighters, who were sadly martyred, Abbakka was consistently victorious in battle and eventually successful in routing the Portuguese out of the Malabar coast. Had Abbakka and her allies failed, the history of the world post 16th century would have been quite different. Instead of English, Indians would probably be speaking Portuguese.

The memory of Abbakka's valour is preserved as legend in the Yakshagana and Bhuta Kola traditions of folk-theatre in coastal Karnataka where the dancer/devotee enraptured in a trance, recounts the deeds of Abbakka Mahadevi, elevating her to the status of a goddess. The documentary integrates this traditional folk-theatre as the cornerstone around which Abbakka's story unfolds.

Director(s) Statement

I was drawn to Abbakka's story when I was ten years old and chanced upon Rani Abbakka's Amar Chitra Katha, a children's comic book. It felt like discovering a treasure that nobody seemed to know about, a sentiment that endures to this day. Apart from being a valiant, inspiring leader, Abbakka was a feminist and a secularist even before these concepts existed. There is great sadness when deserving heroes remain uncelebrated, but along with that comes a strong desire to tell the world about them. This is the reason I am committed to making this film.

Lhasa Ma Soon Chha

There Is Gold In Lhasa

India, Nepal | English, Nepali, Tibetan | Anthropology, Gender and Sexuality, Love and Border

Synopsis

An ancient trading route in the Himalayas still carries the footprints of those who dared to make the arduous journey. There was gold to be found in Lhasa, literally and figuratively. Women too traveled along these risky paths but their footprints have been erased.

The search for these women begins in Kathmandu, home to the Lhasa Newar community, the traditional trading caste. Here we find whiffs of these nameless women through hearsay.

Putali Maharani, a Newar palace maid-turned-queen, sent her two sisters to set up a trading house in Lhasa. Who were these women? Another faint shadow appears in a book - that of a woman nicknamed 'Walking Goddess'. She is believed to have traveled from Kathmandu to Lhasa, disguised as a man, in search of her husband. A crowd had gathered on her arrival in Lhasa to witness a rare Newar woman who made it to Tibet. No one remembers her real name or what happened to her.

The film follows the Old Silk route that was most prevalent in the late stages of this golden period of trade. Along the way, we search for traces of women's lives, their ambitions and adventures.

My friend, Manushi, was the protagonist of my documentary, Daughter of Nepal (2018). Her grandfather's book about his travels to Lhasa in the 1930s became my entry point into the trade route. After extensive research, it was apparent that the representation of women in historical and literary accounts is grossly limited and skewed. The complexities of their lives have been completely ignored. This brought me to two central questions: Can we recover a past that was never recorded? Is there a future without a past? This film is a life-affirming revival of women's lives lost across borders and generations.

Romancing the Dance

India, Russia | English, Russian | Arts, Music and Culture

Synopsis

The true story of Anna Pavlova, Russian prima ballerina, the most-celebrated dancer of her time and Udai Shankar, Indian cult figure in the world of dance and the rebirth of the traditional Indian dances.

Very few people know that Anna Pavlova, one of the most famous world ballet stars was, so to say, the godmother of the rebirth of the traditional Indian dances as an art form. In 1923 she met a young Indian student Udai Shankar who introduced her to the culture of his amazing motherland. None of them knew back in 1923 that their meeting in London would change their fates and become once in a lifetime opportunity.

In India the Shankar brothers are household names known to every educated person. Udai and Ravi are among the largest contributors to the development and promotion of the traditional Indian culture in the 20th century. Udai is called the father of the Indian dance and Ravi introduced the world (and the Beatles) to the virtuoso sitar ballads.

The documentary will tell about the relationship between Anna Pavlova and Udai Shankar, the revival of classical Indian dance and the creative career of world famous brothers - Udai and Ravi Shankar.

The Valley of Health

India | English, Rajasthani, Tamil | Anthropology, Environment & Sustainability, Health and Mental Health, Women's Movement

Synopsis

An incredible and empowering tale of a people led revolution in community health, that unfolded over 20 years in a remote tribal village nestled within the depths of a forest in South India.

In 1992, the valley of Sittilingi faced alarming healthcare challenges, resulting in tragically high infant and maternal mortality rates. With the nearest hospital requiring a journey of 48 km through poorly severed public transportation routes, emergencies invariably led to devastating outcomes.

Little did the people of valley know that a decision made by two young doctors elsewhere, were to alter their lives forever. Dr Regi and Dr Lalitha's decision to move to Sittilingi and be of service to the villagers marked the beginning of a transformative journey. With the unwavering support from the villagers, the doctors established Tribal Health Initiative (THI), igniting a revolution in community health.

Over 20 years, the healthcare revolution transformed the valley into a healthcare hub for villages in a 50km radius. It brought down infant mortality from 147 to 20 per 1000 babies and eradicated maternal mortality.

We aim to document the transformative journey of the village, the doctors and its people, narrating a story of communal determination.

In these somber times, the need to share this story seemed imperative; a story that can instill hope, or perhaps inspire. I was drawn to subject when I met the doctors and the people of the valley. The challenges they faced, the story of the revolution and the results they achieved bewildered me and profoundly compelled me to tell their story.

Narratively it will be blending exposition, observation and reflection. It shall offer diverse perspectives and steer clear of a saviour narrative, while capturing the valley's rich biodiversity. The documentary would serve as a homage to the triumph of a marginalized community's shared resolve.

Producer(s) Statement

Every revolution has its long standing historical ramifications, they are lessons for the future. Through A Broken Glass

India | English | Others

Synopsis

Most often, what was relevant and utmost important in the recent past, does not matter anymore today, sometimes in the next hour itself.

We constantly fret and get upset when our regular hair comb or favorite dress is missing. But what would be the scenario when our closest family members go missing suddenly? That too, all of them together at once, forever?

This exactly is what happened in Dr Chandra's life, who saw off his wife and children at a Canadian airport for their flight to India in the night. With plans to join them soon, he came home to have a well-deserved sleep after a tiring day, only to be woken up in the morning with the devastating news that all his family members, 'vanished into thin air', so to say, when the Air India flight 'Kanishka' they were travelling in, was blown up mid-air by terrorists and that there were no survivors.

This documentary explores this human quality of how a person faced with a life altering situation not only regroupes himself but also influences the lives of scores of people while going through this constant grief. A story of human will, worthy of greater study.

Director(s) Statement

In Trapped, I highlight the harsh realities faced by laborers who, driven by poverty, take on difficult jobs with minimal training to support their families. The young Himalayas of Uttarakhand are highly sensitive to drilling; are we risking nature by building more roads and tunnels? The rescue mission demonstrated human resilience, with trapped workers banding together to survive 17 harrowing days. With the failure of advanced machinery, the courage of the rat miners saved lives, underscoring the risks we take to protect others. This film seeks to expose personal struggles, investigate what went wrong, and hold accountable those responsible for the disaster.

Producer(s) Statement

Amidst every obstacle and setback, reporters Avneesh and Chitral witnessed a metamorphosis. The community responded dynamically, demonstrating an unwavering willingness to contribute in any way possible. On the night of November 28, hundreds of people who had spent the last two weeks outside the mouth of the tunnel as one big family dispersed, unlikely to ever see each other again. But all of them - mediapersons, government officials, rescue workers, family members and the locals - will forever look back on the incident fondly, as an example of how our differences dissolve and humanity prevails in the face of calamity.

In a world where everyone seeks their own Umbrella—for protection, concealment, or a sense of belonging—what does an Umbrella mean for a young nomad in a traveling circus?

Raised in a century-old circus, Vijay, a spirited dancer despite his congenital glaucoma, thrives as part of a troupe bringing joy to isolated communities in southern Tamil Nadu, India. Despite the taxing life and bare-bones budget, Vijay's joyful spirit and the companionship of Godu, a retiring pony, keep life exciting. However, the new season brings challenges. In his dreams, Godu symbolizes a past he's struggling to reconcile with his present.

Amidst this turmoil, Vijay's older sister, Nadhiya, becomes his pillar of comfort. As Vijay grapples with his identity and physical limitations, Nadhiya's support is crucial. Her decision to stay in school opens Vijay's eyes to new possibilities as his role in the troupe changes.

Through Vijay's eyes, the story explores resilience, family, and the quest for identity, highlighting the bittersweet reality of a nomadic life. Ultimately, Vijay's journey is one of self-discovery and finding his own special umbrella in a world of constant change.

Amid COVID, I moved to my wife's village near to the settlement of the Dommaras, indigenous acrobats. Playing with their kids broke barriers, inspiring me to document their fading traditions, focusing on Vijay, a 9-year-old. Vijay, who is torn between his parents' circus traditions and the discrimination he faces at school, as well as his own physical condition, tells his story through his eyes and voice. Despite all the crises he has faced in his life, Vijay is a wonderful storyteller who weaves magical tales throughout his travels and journeys. Whispers of the Desert Wind

India | Hindi | Environment & Sustainability

Synopsis

Set in the Thar desert in Rajasthan - the story of a man who sees solutions where we see problems. A farmer with the mind of an engineer, Chatar Singh comes from a robust tradition of people's science that helped aboriginal camel and goat herders thrive for centuries at Ramgarh - the driest region in India. When an expensive canal broke their centuries-old network of community-maintained waterbodies - there was a crisis of drinking water!

Chatar Singh galvanised the community to repair their system. Women were the first to support him. Then he taught the Bhils - from the lowest rung of the society - how to harness rainwater - trapping sand during summer sandstorms in a hedge of thorns.

In 5 years, they bought tractors and became employers.

Burying their pride, now the upper-castes want to emulate the Bhils.

This is an unfolding inspirational story with hundreds of shallow wells, some ponds and 'Khadiins' being repaired or built - trapping water on the sub-surface gypsum belt in an area where the scientists claim there is no sweet water.

The film paints intimate portraits of life in the desert - as four strong characters draw upon ancestral wisdom to reclaim their water sovereignty.

Director(s) Statement

Resources on the blue planet are finite.

In an over-engineered world hurtling towards a water-scarce future, we need to find the key that unlocks ancestral wisdom and sustainable mores. A rusty key lies hidden in the sands of the Thar desert.

Chatar Singh sees solutions when we see problems.

Can we borrow his glasses to see the world in a new light?

If a simple farmer can motivate an entire community to believe in their collective power and repair a centuries-old system without waiting for the government, surely we can do something that changes the status quo wherever we are.

Synopsis

In 2021, retired army Colonel Vivek Mundkur, an experienced paramotorist and India's first hang glider pilot, defies age and doubt by embarking on a daring adventure. At 76, he sets out to fly a backpack paramotor, reigniting his passion for flight after a 17-year hiatus. Despite concerns from many about the risks associated with such a daring venture at his age, Vivek finds unwavering support from his friends and fellow paraglider pilots to ensure a safe return to the skies.

Director(s) Statement

I met Vivek Mundkur at a 2019 film festival in Pune. His captivating recounting of his aviation journey and innovative spirit left me inspired. As an aviation enthusiast, I was drawn to creating a film about India's first hang gliding pilot and a forgotten hero who built and flew his contraption in 1976, in an India that had gained independence only a few decades earlier and was still establishing its roots. However, I aimed to avoid the clichés of a typical biopic that simply recounts the past.

In 2021, when Vivek publicly announced his intention to fly again at 76 after a seventeen-year hiatus, I knew I had found the heart of our story. Filming posed ethical dilemmas, especially considering the raw nature of paramotoring and the possible scenario of capturing a fatal accident. I prioritized Vivek's comfort and safety, giving him full control over equipment placement and flight decisions.

This film captures not just Vivek's journey but also the tight-knit paragliding community in India. The camaraderie among other characters underscores the warmth and unity within this adrenaline-fueled world.

Hearsay

Hearsay

India | Bengali, English

Synopsis

In the summer of 2022, four young actors converge at the historic Tapan Theatre nestled in Sadananda Road, Kolkata, to film a play featuring a man and an empty chair. This decaying playhouse, once on the brink of demolition by real estate forces during the tumultuous COVID years, held within its walls the power to birth a new narrative. The intervention of a passionate theatre group, Aneek Kolkata, coupled with the resilience of the playhouse staff, helped Tapan escape the inevitable doom through a long and arduous battle. 2022 marks the transformation of Tapan Theatre from a forgotten relic into one of Kolkata's thriving cultural hubs, a truly resurrected stage. Hearsay tries to weave the boundless expanse of imagination within this rejuvenated space, serving as an immersive installation of imaginations. The actors explore memories, rumors, untold stories and the resilient spirit that enabled Tapan Theatre to endure and rise again.

Director(s) Statement

We are actors with considerable professional experience in films and theatre, transitioning into a parallel career as a director-producer duo, Hearsay being our debut project. The concept of Hearsay is a proclamation that curated life experiences and performative interfaces are valid tools of conservation. Tapan Theatre, despite its present rejuvenation and regularity, is as transient as anything in a world driven by capital. Despite its recent triumph over ill fate, one cannot remain unaware of its eventual demise. Hence, as makers, we propose to preserve this space by chancing upon, incubating, curating, and conjuring moments in our real time spent there. The recording and later fabrications of those moments will be our trial to conserve a palpable life and performative experience that this playhouse allowed, accommodated, and perpetuated. It is a trial to initiate a dialogue with our posterity, a testament of our time.

Synopsis

In the 1990s, Shau was part of the Mumbai Mafia, living life as a freewheeler. From handling guns to extortions he had done it all. But as time passed, the influence of the mafia waned.

Many perished, many changed their path but Shau lived on with the shelter of the stories of his past. Perhaps Shau, the man with an unbeatable heart, was too much of a winner to let himself be confined to the mainstream.

Now 38, he lives like a nomad on a railway platform. Although his physical stature has shrunk, his attitude still flaunts the carefreeness. But as age sets in, he regrets not keeping in touch with his family and his love. With this desperation he boards a train. Will he find them? Will they remember him? The film unfolds the journey of a man's struggle from life of freedom to that of a mainstream.

Director(s) Statement

My aim with the film is to delve into the complex inner world of a character torn between societal expectations and personal freedom. The protagonist faces relentless pressure to conform to mainstream living, driven by the desire for acceptance and stability. However, beneath this facade lies a deep-seated longing for autonomy and solitude. As he tries to conform to the norms, we reflect on our own negotiation process in life. We all find ourselves compromising our innate desires for freedom in exchange for societal benefits.

Synopsis

Two siblings—a sister and a brother—are working in different cities far from their region, Barak Valley, Assam. After their parents' deaths, as the prospect of returning to their region seems highly unlikely, they contemplate selling their uninhabited, dilapidated, old-structured childhood home. Most of these old-structured Assam-type houses in Barak Valley are now beyond repair and unsafe for habitation. They are either abandoned by people or occupied by seniors alone. They lie deserted amid the recent alarming infrastructural changes in the valley. Encroaching upon rural and forest areas, coupled with hill cutting, is causing intensified environmental calamities that trigger landslides across the region, disrupting its rail and road services, which connect it with its neighbouring lands. As the landscape of Barak Valley is going through these definite transitions, the siblings' phone conversations are heard, delving into their connection with their ancestral land and their vanishing sense of belonging.

Director(s) Statement

I grew up in the Barak Valley, located in southern Assam. The history of separation from its socio-cultural-economic contact with Bengal, immense communication bottlenecks, industrial backwardness, and numerous environmental calamities throughout the year contribute to a constant stagnancy here.

Like many from my generation, in my youth I migrated to a big city in hope of acquiring a life better than what my earlier generations had lived here. Such relocation has increased immensely in recent times, causing our society to slowly disintegrate.

On returning to my region, I felt an eerie detachment from the very environment that has given shape to our understanding and senses. This feeling is becoming more bizarre as I witness rapid infrastructural changes, intensifying environmental calamities. This film evolved from my interactions with my siblings, friends, and acquaintances who once migrated from Barak Valley and are now finding it difficult to identify with it.

My documentary is a very personal project about my region and my people, and I would want to show it to professionals from the documentary film industry to get their feedback and understand if it is able to connect with people outside of my reality. For someone like me who is from a remote region of Assam, it is extremely difficult to access platforms that can offer such interactions.

Where Is My Home?

Where Is My Home?

India | Marathi

Synopsis

The film follows the journey of a granddaughter as she navigates the challenges faced by her elderly grandmother, who is neglected due to her age and behavior. Despite initial resistance from her mother, the granddaughter takes it upon herself to arrange a cataract operation for her grandmother. As the grandmother's condition improves, the family dynamics undergo a transformation, with even the mother softening her stance. However, the grandmother's unsettled status persists as she moves between her daughter's and son's homes, never finding a permanent place to call her own. Through this narrative, the film sheds light on the struggles of elderly individuals, particularly women, who find themselves in vulnerable situations, lacking agency and stability in their twilight years. Themes of family, responsibility, and the complexities of caregiving are explored, offering a poignant reflection on the human experience.

Director(s) Statement

Where Is My Home? is a deeply personal journey that resonates with the complexities of my own family dynamics. Drawing from my own experiences, I aim to shed light on the silent battles faced by aging individuals, while also celebrating the resilience and strength inherent within them. As the narrative unfolds, I hope audiences are inspired to reflect on their own relationships and the importance of cherishing and valuing the elderly members of their families. This sentiment is mirrored in our exploration of the shifting perception of home, as depicted through the grandmother's yearning for stability and the family's struggle to balance economic hardships with emotional bonds. Through our vérité filming style, we capture the raw emotions and nuances of everyday life, inviting viewers to immerse themselves in the intimate moments that define the human experience.

In the 1990s, Shau was part of the Mumbai Mafia, living life as a freewheeler. From handling guns to extortions he had done it all. But as time passed, the influence of the mafia waned.

Many perished, many changed their path but Shau lived on with the shelter of the stories of his past. Perhaps Shau, the man with an unbeatable heart, was too much of a winner to let himself be confined to the mainstream.

Now 38, he lives like a nomad on a railway platform. Although his physical stature has shrunk, his attitude still flaunts the carefreeness. But as age sets in he regrets not keeping in touch with his family and his love. With this desperation he boards a train. Will he find them? Will they remember him? The film unfolds the journey of a man's struggle from life of freedom to that of a mainstream.

Moon on the Man

Moon on the Man

English, Hindi, Marathi | India | Documentary Feature | 78 mins

Completion Date November 2021

Praklawm, an 80-year-old man, has a checkered past. A messenger boy amid India's independence struggle, he worked with the country's most acclaimed actor-filmmaker Guru Dutt. He mowed the lawns of Sir Ian Fleming who gave him the name – Praklawm; an epithet he kept for the sake of pride and nostalgia. Two of his friends, Aasif and Wadood, begin to deconstruct Praklawm through the varied prisms of individual perspectives, subjective realities, relevance, reality and validity of human perceptions. To comprehend the scale of human perspective and to test Praklawm's reality, Aasif juxtaposes the reality of another man, Sailesh who has worked with several leading, iconic and highly respected filmmakers. While almost everything Praklawm says is fundamentally unverifiable, everything Sailesh says is entirely verifiable and true. Yet, Praklawm lives a respectable life and Sailesh dwells in misery. Moon on the man questions the most basic questions of reality, perception and choices.

Rukhu Matir Dukhu Majhi

Dukhu Majhi - son of the barren land

Bengali | India | Documentary Short | 28 mins

Awating International Premiere

Completion Date December 2021

This documentary is regarding the relentless struggle of a solitary man in his unique way to save the mother earth. The old man armed daily with two canisters of water, sacks, shovels, burnt wood and saplings, all mounted on a cycle, a poor, completely-illiterate old villager spends his years planting trees at roadsides, school premises and wherever else he can; and taking proper care of them.

Dukhu Majhi lives in an area where the temperature rises up to 50 degrees Celsius in the summer. He feels that people need shadows from the scorching sun. Over the years, Dukhu Majhi has perfected his own unique method of preparation, plantation and nurturing. To ensure that no passer-by dares touch them, he covers his newly-planted saplings with cloth taken from the nearby crematorium. This poor and completely illiterate man has a strong philosophy, that too is very interesting.

Sylheti | India | Documentary Feature | 48 mins

Tentative Completion Date February 2025

Two siblings, a sister and a brother, are working in different cities far from their region, Barak Valley, Assam. After their parents' deaths, as the prospect of returning to their region seems highly unlikely, they contemplate selling their uninhabited, dilapidated, old-structured childhood home. Most of these old-structured Assam-type houses in Barak Valley are now beyond repair and unsafe for habitation. They are either abandoned by people or occupied by seniors alone. They lie deserted amid the recent alarming infrastructural changes in the valley. Encroaching upon rural and forest areas, coupled with hill cutting, is causing intensified environmental calamities that trigger landslides across the region, disrupting its rail and road services, which connect it with its neighbouring lands. As the landscape of Barak Valley is going through these definite transitions, the siblings' phone conversations are heard, delving into their connection with their ancestral land and their vanishing sense of belonging.

A Good Wife

A Good Wife

English, Marwari | India | Documentary Feature | 90 mins

Completion Date May 2024

My family unequivocally disapproves of my unconventionality for a Hindu-Marwari community girl. So, after bearing the drift in my marriage, when I am contemplating divorce, they hold me responsible for the fallout in my marriage as for them I failed to be an ideal wife. The blame is on me for choosing to be a filmmaker, not bearing a child and live a life which seeks freedom. Sacrifice is considered a virtuous responsibility of a wife and especially so in my community which practiced the custom of Sati historically. Through this film I am trying to decide for myself if I should continue being into a holy marriage or free myself for my life.

Amma Amamma Ammu

Granny Mummy & Ammu

Telugu | India | Documentary Feature | 33 mins

Tentative Completion Date December 2024

The film catches a duality. At one end are the everyday adventures of a family living together in the pandemic. As they find joy in the mundane, the daily chores, the familiar jokes and the gossip shared. But on the other hand, their routine acts of love, wisdom and perhaps sacrifice... belies an uneasy sense of freedoms being held back. Caught in a web of relations. Home is a dilemma. And family is a site for patriarchy. And everyone must step into their expected roles. A mother whose son is not getting married. A sister who must juggle a career and family. A child who must please her elders. And a son who longs for freedom. The film is about families and contradictions. How we hurt the people we love the most. And the distance patriarchy creates between men and women, brother and sister, mother and child.

In the late eighteenth century, Calcutta witnessed an efflorescence of musical experimentations. In the white town, memsahebs took keen interest in the music they heard at the nautch parties and transcribed the songs in western staff notation. They played these ghazals and Tuppahs on their harpsichords. The new music acquired a new name -Hindustani Air. In the black town, Nidhu Babu composed tuppahs in Bengali and the kobis locked themselves in battles of musical with Keertans and Shyama Sangeet drifted from the temples and rent the evening air. There was music for every ear and every soul. Musicians and music scholars in Kolkata and London bring alive the lost era with their soulful renditions and scholarly comments.

Moving Focus

Moving Focus

Bengali, English, Hindi | India | Documentary Feature | 70 mins

Completion Date June 2023

Goutam Ghose's documentaries and feature films over the past five decades have explored the socio-economic, cultural and political landscape of our Nation. His early films captured the intensity of rural life of the subaltern people in various forms rich in anthropological diversity. Post-globalization, he started to focus on the decadence of the middle and upper classes and their servile submission to monstrous consumerism. During the making of documentaries on Bismillah Khan and Dalai Lama, Ghose's atheistic mindset evolved into comparative religion, which was reflected in the biopic Moner Manush on Lalan Fakir. Moving Focus is centered on Ghose's oeuvre and presents the cerebral filmmaker in an insightful and thought-provoking way.

My Radio My Life

My Radio My Life

English, Hindi, Marathi | India | Documentary Feature | 67 mins

Completion Date June 2023

The Film revisits the Golden Era of Radio, when it was the dominant, popular and only source of entertainment, knowledge and news across the national borders. We spent two years in developing the concept and researching for the film. We talked to several people to understand what the Golden Era of radio meant to them. We selected stories that show three elements in common – passion, emotion and nostalgia. Radio restorer who started own museum, historic Apollo 11 moon landing commentator, Award winning HAM radio operator, an octogenarian's unwavering determination to get his treasured valve radio repaired. This is probably the first-of-its-kind film where the radio is also a protagonist! Tomorrow, you may see the radio in a museum, but not people to tell stories of Radio. That's why this documentary is important to have made; it can exist as part of archives all over the world.

The Invisible Wayfarers

Bengali, Hindi | India | Documentary Feature | 86 mins

Tentative Completion Date December 2024

An annual pilgrimage in which thousands of marginal Sufi followers walk for thirteen days through the rough terrains of North India to reach the abode of their patron saint. Through the eyes of a disabled biker, a wistful cook, a jumpy mechanic, a mendicant tramp, and other fellow travellers a syncretic journey of love, faith and amity gets unfurled. The marching followers traverse over four hundred kilometres from Delhi to Ajmer carrying standards chanting and walking in tableaux throughout the day and camping on the roadside during the night to cook, sing and rest. They share mythic stories of food and water, of abundance and scarcity, of mundane and magic to heal their heart and cool their sore heels. After all, those who smile and bear the pain of their bruised feet in this journey are the real lovers of their patron saint, Gharib Nawaz (the benefactor of the poor).

Vijaya - Beyond The Perception

Vijaya - Beyond The Perception

English, Hindi | India | Documentary Feature | 82 mins

Tentative Completion Date October 2024

“There is no stigma attached to recognising a bad decision in time to install a better one” - Laurence.J.Peter 1972 In the 1930s, a movement in the U.S.A vilified the cannabis plant, linked to Mexican immigration and a perceived threat to the ‘American dream’. In 1961, the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs globally influenced countries like India to criminalise cannabis, despite its rich history and documented usage.

However, Israeli researchers in 1964 isolated cannabinoids from the plant revealing its medicinal potential. This sparked global interest, with some governments decriminalising or regulating its usage.

India's evolving stance spurred entrepreneurs and researchers but in the current scenario, doctors recommend it discreetly, patients use it and remain tacit, and some would rather endure pain than use cannabis due to its narcotic designation, associated with immorality and criminality. This documentary explores India's relationship with the cannabis plant, urging re-evaluation and a renewed dialogue.

Kamruzzaman Balark, a Bangladesh born writer-director-actor and theatre activist selects Rabindranath Tagore's play Achalayatan, which talks about the stagnation and conflicts resulting from the rigidity of thoughts and beliefs, and Kamruzzaman finds parallels in today's fractured society. Perhaps the splitting of cultures along religious boundaries too has their root cause in the barriers created by our minds, like the historical division of Bengal. The past cannot be undone, but can shared love of one's culture bridge artificial political divides. He finds an ally from across the border, Moulinath Ganguly, an accomplished theatre artist born in West Bengal, with shared passion for their rich cultural heritage. They discover that the force which unites them is far more powerful than the one that separated them.

Inspired by the multicultural spirit in their adopted country Australia, together they set off to stage Achalayatan, in a land beyond the boundaries of their divided origin.

Awating International Premiere

Completion Date December 2023

The Drama group has chosen Farmers' Suicide as a subject for the Maharashtra State Competition. However, the director realizes that actors have no real connect with the subject and are just uttering their scripted lines. He decides to take them to a nearby village. As luck would have it, there is actually a suicide committed by a farmer. The media people are asking menacing questions, the family is in great grief and no one is bothered to actually help them. Having seen this harsh reality, the actors are now performing very well. Ahilya in stone-form will be blessed and for that Ram will have to appear. Likewise situation of Farmers will improve but for that Ram in form of technology, AI, Robotics, Financial/Psychological Support groups will have to reappear and actually help the farmers. This is not work of Govt. alone but entire society will have to join in. How the actors who have no connect with harsh realities of farmers, transform into actors with lot of empathy is one important transition point.

Kathakaar

The Story Teller

Hindi | India | Short Fiction | 30 mins

Awaiting International Premiere

Completion Date April 2024

Kathakaar creatively intertwines the essence of Kathak, a traditional Indian storytelling form, with its narrative about a female inspector's quest to solve a case of child trafficking. The title itself, derived from "Kathak", (A popular Indian Dance Form) signifies the storytelling through the medium of dance, adding depth to the film's exploration of women empowerment. Just as Kathak dancers convey narratives through their movements, the characters in the film weave a tale of resilience, courage, and eventual triumph over adversity. Embodying the spirit of Kathak storytelling, as the lead character tackles the complexities of the case alongside her colleague; her journey becomes a metaphorical dance, where each step represents a challenge overcome and each gesture symbolizes her unwavering determination. Through a thematic connection, "Kathakaar" not only sheds light on the issue of child trafficking but also celebrates the power of storytelling as a tool for empowerment and advocacy.
